This artist was born in Pittsburgh, in 1928, and died in New York, in 1[illegible]7. His parents got married in 1909, and immigrated to the Usa from Mezőlaborc, Hungary (now: Medzilaborce, Slovakia). He had two elder brothers: Paul and John.
He was a successful artist, avantgarde film director and commercial illustrator. He is famous for exploring popular culture in his work. Actually, he was the leading figure of the American pop-art movement. Pop-art is an art movement in the 20th century which is inspired by the products of the popular culture. Anything, from everyday objects, meals, drinks, comics, celebrities, to the everyday life of the consumer society, can be the subject of this art movement. The artists reproduce them without changing them or just placing them in a new environment. Thus, a factory building can become a landscape, or a bottle of Coca-Cola still art. He saw art as a product, the same as the clothes you wear and the food you eat.
Being very talented, he worked for fashion magazines, like Glamour, Vogue and Harpers Bazaar. He illustrated numerous fashion commercials, books, music albums, and made innovative advertisements, as well.
In the 1960s he experimented with mixing art, commercials and comics.
Warhol liked to use bright colours and silk screening technique. He liked using screen printing to mass-produce artworks based on photographs of celebrities, like of Marilyn Monroe.
His special, underground films were unique that time. The word superstar comes from his films, like Viva, Ultraviolet and Edie. His studio in New York was just simply called The Factory. This was a reference to the mass-produced nature of his artworks.
He had a very particular personal style. He had a shock of white hair and was usually seen wearing a lot of black, leather jackets and glasses or sunglasses.
He dressed up and experimented a lot with his personal style. He made a lot of self-portraits.
